NEW JERSEY - New Jersey's public charter schools have rapidly pivoted to meet their students and families' needs during the COVID-19 pandemic. On Tuesday, May 19, the New Jersey Public Charter Schools Association and educators from four New Jersey public charter schools will gather to share innovative distance learning practices with other educators, with the hopes that other public schools in New Jersey and beyond can learn, analyze, and implement these best practices in their schools.

Senator Teresa Ruiz and Assemblywoman Pamela Lampitt, who chair the Senate and Assembly Education Committees, will join the conference.

Educators from KIPP NJ, Uncommon Schools, iLearn Schools, and Unity Charter School, will share their innovative practices for navigating challenges that schools all over the country face as they transition to distance learning. Topics include:

- Supporting middle school readers and writers virtually
- Best practices for serving students with disabilities virtually
- Supporting students and families with social and emotional learning (SEL) resources during COVID-19
- Staying connected with teachers during distance learning

Educators, members of the press, parents, and interested parties can RSVP to the teleconference here: https://zoom.us/webinar/register/WN_CRQ52JhwQKu-QxS4IWB3Tw.
